Seamless Border uses the method of Blending two images together. The benefit of this is that the tiles can be combined very easily, without the user having to plan the blend and worry about the accuracy. A good example of this would be a border for your web design; this can be a very quick and easy border but the user will be able to see that the border is not absolutely perfect. With seamless border you can provide a seamless border such as one with the same gradient, texture and colour to fit your brand but without having to adjust individual tiles. 3 Methods of Joining Tiles: There are 3 methods of combining borders, they are described below. Method 1: The Alpha Angle method This is the most used method. The above image illustrates this: Left hand (blue) tile is lined up with the left hand (yellow) tile and then blended together using 50% opacity. This is the easiest method and is the basis for most guides and tutorials that exist for seamless border. Method 2: The Mirroring Method When using this, the left hand tile is mirrored across to the right hand tile. They are then blended together. Method 3: The Difference Method This is the easiest to work with but may not look as smooth. In order to blend the two tiles, they are taking the average of the colour value of the pixels under the two tiles. As the average is above 50%, the pixels of the left hand tile are taken over those of the right hand tile. This means that the left hand tile is pushed up the image. The above example shows this method. The difference between this and Method 1 is that in this image, the top pixel is blended, with the top pixel of the border tile (red) and the pixels under the border tile (blue). This is because in Method 1, there is no border and so the pixels are blended together.
