What's new in Survivor Jones:

Survivor Jones was an American reality television series which aired on CTV starting on October 11, 2004. A spin-off from the Canadian reality series Survivor: Fiji (2003), Survivor Jones featured four Canadian women competing in Survivor-like circumstances throughout North America for a US$1-million prize. The first season's winner was Maureen Girardi, who won the reward challenge when her team was the last to complete their tattoo. The series was sponsored by The Globe and Mail and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, who split the salaries of the contestants roughly half and half. The show's first season aired for four weeks over two episodes, excluding a public viewing party which saw 24,000 Canadians attend a 25-hour simulcast of Survivor: Fiji. The tournament concept was kept similar to Survivor: Fiji but eliminated the traditional twist at several points in the competition. Instead, the contestants were put in and out of a "target" area, allowing the host to change the directions of the season's primary challenges. Survivor Jones failed to make ratings when it was first aired in North America but caught on well with Canadians and attracted large audiences in some cases. The show failed to gain a significant audience in the United States, but did have a lower-rated second season. Challenges The Globe and Mail adapted the characters and challenges of Survivor: Fiji for Survivor Jones. The host and his crew were used to return the contestants to their starting positions. Challenges were frequently played in pairs of two, with one contestant from each pair trying to overcome their opponent in order to win the prize money. Unlike the contestants in Fiji, two of each contestant's tribemates were brought into each challenge. Following the elimination of the traditional tie-breaker challenge at the end of the game, the host would also make up his own, letting the team that completed their Tribal Council fastest win the reward challenge at the end of the season. In the first season, the final round of challenges was played at the end of both episodes of season one. Season 1 Survivor Jones used a nine-week format with four episodes in each week, beginning in Niagara Falls, Ontario. The first reward challenge was hosted at the Toronto Boardwalk Amusement Park. The first elimination of the season was the first time a contestant eliminated the other two, eliminating the two from the game by both individual and team immunity. Briana LaForge had been
