A classified ad medium for shows and events. Most often available for live music shows, comic-book conventions, or science-fiction conventions. In the former case, it is sometimes run by promoters who use the venue as a showroom to display some of their merchandise to potential buyers. A comec is usually one of two things: the company website or a webmaster using a server to publish Internet-based classified advertisements, including full-service classifieds such as those provided by Craigslist.

Definition of the. Getting an idea of what kind of demographics a company is targeting, a comec can provide an indirect means of marketing. By using an online form as a phone number, a company is essentially calling a comec to ask for an application.

Companies can use this medium, which is sometimes called a "straw man", to gauge whether a given company's product will have appeal to the desired demographic. The comec acts as an additional target market research tool.[2] Affiliate program: a type of online marketing in which a comec and an affiliated comec work together to promote each other's products and services. When a comec owner has a product that he wishes to sell, he uses his own comec to call potential customers. The comec asks customers if they are interested in the product, and if they are, the comec provides a link where they can buy it. If the customer buys the product, the company earns a commission. The comec receives commissions for referring new customers as well, and has a decrease in the amount of ads needed to sell a product.[3] In a similar vein, the comec owner may want to promote the comec directly, using some of their advertising budget to pay comecs to put a link on their site that takes the customer to the comec's own web site. Different categories: As search engines are a part of the comec, webmasters can use more advanced strategies, such as metatags or page titles to obtain better placement in search results. The webmaster can also add a link to a page describing the content of that page to the HTML code of the page itself, hoping to raise its perceived relevance (alt="). A publisher's ad agency or in-house company's marketing team may hire a comec to call those individuals or companies whose information is listed in this manner and create a relationship with that customer. Other companies create

The next year we added an optional magnetic pocket clip. The Kestrel Odyssey is a durable, fully-folding knife that is ideal for outdoor activities like camping and fishing. The titanium D2 blade is forged from .074-inch thick, 5-AL4 tool steel that offers excellent hardness, wear resistance and toughness. This knife includes a comfortable, spring-assisted back-lock mechanism that prevents the blade from accidentally reopening. Its hollow-ground blade is hollow-ground from its tip to the spine, thus increasing cutting edge radius without sacrificing strength and durability. The blade is sharpened from the tip and spine to the back edge. The Kestrel Odyssey also has an integrated lanyard hole at the top of the handle for added security. Ambidextrous thumb tab-grip design makes the Kestrel Odyssey easy to open and close with one hand. The Kestrel Odyssey is designed to be lightweight and easy to carry. The handle is crafted from 6061-T6 aluminum alloy, which makes the Kestrel Odyssey lightweight and corrosion resistant. The titanium-finished aluminum scales are comfortable to hold in either hand. Folding handles help reduce weight and storage space. 10,Material: Titanium composite handle,D2 Titanium D2- Vanadium Composite Blade,D2 Vanadium high endurance CPM S35VN blade,HPL With Stowaway; Double action button lock. 10,Blade Length: The length of the knife is 4,Please check your measurements before placing order.
