The technology is based on the same physics engine as last year's FIFA 21, but with a deeper and more refined understanding of the way players move. The result is a more realistic and detailed ball flight and behavior in all parts of the match. "Every part of FIFA 22 has been defined by our understanding of how real players play," explains Peter Hulme, Executive Vice President of Marketing at EA Sports. "Now, in FIFA, we have a greater understanding of the mechanics, speed, fluidity and flexibility of player movement, and this allows us to better respond to the increasingly varied and evolving needs of our most faithful gamers." With "HyperMotion Technology," FIFA 22 introduces new animations that help create an extremely detailed and sophisticated set of fluid and reactive animations. Compared to previous FIFA titles, more player movement is captured in real time and players react more directly and naturally to collisions and circumstances around them. "One of the most important aspects of physics in the world of sports is the unpredictability of movement," said Peter Della Rocca, Executive Producer at EA Sports. "With FIFA 22, we've created an incredibly dynamic and responsive physics system that's truly in keeping with the fast-paced nature of the real world." "We created a forward-thinking, physics-based football video game to provide the most realistic football experience possible," said Ludwig Knispel, Head of FIFA. "FIFA 22 takes the art of simulation to new heights with HyperMotion, and moves us one step closer to the real experience of being a football player." FIFA 22 will be available on Xbox One on September 13 for the suggested retail price of $59.99 USD and will also be available on PS4. For more information about FIFA 22, please visit FIFA.com.
